Greenwin Farming For The Community.

Greenwin, a leading property management company in Toronto, sought to enhance the quality of life for residents in one of their low-income housing properties. Their vision was to integrate an indoor farm within an aftercare facility, providing fresh produce and educational opportunities for the children and families residing there.

The Challenge

Greenwin faced the challenge of implementing an indoor farming solution that would be both effective and manageable within the confines of an aftercare facility.

The goal was to design a system that would produce a significant yield of fresh produce while being simple enough for the staff and residents to maintain. Additionally, the farm needed to serve as an educational tool and a source of food security for the community.

The Solution

Just Vertical applied its expertise in indoor farming to create an indoor farm specifically designed for Greenwin's aftercare facility. The project began with developing a space-conscious indoor farm design, followed by the physical build out and installation of the necessary hardware. Just Vertical then provided comprehensive training sessions and support to Greenwin to facilitate growth and success.

As part of the project, Just Vertical also developed a strategic plan to incorporate the farm's produce into the facility's daily programs, ensuring effective use and community well-being.

The Impact

Within two months, Just Vertical delivered a fully functional indoor farm, complete with detailed CAD renderings and a robust build plan.

The farm now offers fresh produce for meals, serves as an educational resource for children, and provides a food bank for families, fostering community and self-sufficiency.
